PREPARING FOWLS FOR MARKET. Those who have traveled in Europe are aware of the clean and neat condition in which poultry is brought to market, presenting quite a contrast with our slovenly practice. It may have been true in times past that purchasers would not pay the farmer for the care in fattening and preparing poultry in a proper man-ner, that good and bad all sold at the same price, but such is not now the case. All inteligent purchasers, especially those who buy for the New York and other Eastern markets, will pay readily from one to two cents per pound more for good fowls well dressed, than for those brought to market in the ordinary condition. There is, therefore, no excuse for continuing in a practice which is both unprofitable and sloven-

FATTERING .- Young fowls that have the run of the barn yard with plenty of grain, make healthy birds, which no one but a gourmand would despise; but unless very early chickens, they will not become plump and fat, especially if a cross of the large Eastern breeds, which have become so much mixed up with our barn yard fowls. They do not mature early, and while this admixture has doubled the size and weight of the bodies brought to market, we lose the plumpness and fatness of our old small kind, which, if hatched early, obtained maturity about midsummer, and a tolerable degree of fatness during the autumn months. With ordinary keeping the large fowls do not get their growth until autumn, and if then killed without fattening, are heavy, lean, and lack juiciness and flavor. The only way to make them fit for market is to subject them to a fattening process, just as we do our pigs and cattle. We would by no means recommend the barbarous system of stuffing, once quite common among poultry dealers of Europe, and still practiced to some extent. The idea of forcing cooked meal and grease down the throat of a fowl when the stomach is already so full that no delicacy can tempt the bird to receive more, is too revolting for serious consideration. Neither would we advise confining fowls in a dark place, where they will feel uneasy under the restraint, and unless stuffed will lose flesh for a week or two until they become reconciled to the confinement. What we would advise is the confinement of the fowls designed for killing, in a comfortable, clean house, with small range attached, where they shall be provided with plenty of fattening food, such as cooked corn, oat or necessary to induce them to eat more freely. KILLING. - It is a miserable practice to strangle fowls. The head should be taken off at a single blow. For some markets it is best to this appears small. leave the heads on, and in this case cut the jugular vein at the side of the neck just under the gills. Pick before the bird becomes cold. Scalding injures the appearance of the flesh, particularly of the fat, and makes the skin tender, so that it peels, unless handled with dry cloth, but do not take out the gizzard. cloth. After this is done, hang up in a cool, dry room, until all are cool, and you have sufficient to carry to market. For some market dealers will not purchase fowls when they are drawn. This is a foolish notion, as the excrements injure the flesh, if allowed to remain a great while, but must be humored by the farmer and poultry dealer, until people learn better. Caponizing.—Caponizing, in our opinion, is a barbarous operation, and in this country we have not the epicures to make the practice profitable. We would not give the process, but it is called for by several inquiries before us. English works that treat of this subject give a list of instruments necessary for the operation almost sufficient to set up a surgeon, but the peasant women of France are said to be most successful, and their mode of operating the most simple. It is thus described :- The practice of the French country women is to select the close of the spring, or the beginning of autumn, as well as fine weather, for the performance of their work. The parts necessary to be removed being fixed in the abdomen, and attached to the spine at the region of the loins, it is absolutely necessary to open the abdominal cavity for the purpose of their extraction. The bird should be healthy, fasting and about three months old. He is then to be secured by an assistant, upon his back, his belly up-wards, and his head down, that the intestines, &c., may fall up toward the breast; the tail is to be toward the operator. The right leg is then carried along the body, and the left brought backwards, and held in this position, so as to leave the left flank perfectly bare; for it is there that the incision is to be made. The said incision is to be directed from before backwards, tranversely to the length of the body, at the middle of the flank and slightly to the side between the ends of the breast bone and vent. Having plucked away the feathers from the space where it is intended to make the incision, you take a bistoury or a scalpel, and cut through the skin, abdominal muscles, and periteneum; it is better to do this at two or more cuts, in order to aveid the possibility of wounding the intestines—a casualty that would, in most cases, be attended with fatal results. The intestines present themselves at the orifice; but you must not suffer them to come out; on the contrary, you press them gently aside, so as to have room for action. I may observe, that the incision should have been sufficiently large to admit of the forefinger, previously well oiled, being passed into the abdomen, and carried carefully toward the lumbar region of the spine; you will there find what you are in search of. You first reach the left substance, which you detach with your nail, or with your finger bent hook fashion; then you arrive at the right, which you treat similarly—bring both substances forth; you finally return the intestines, sow up the wound with a silk thread-a very few stiches will suffice and smear the place with a little fresh butter. The comb of the capon does not grow to any size, and always retains a palid color.

The process having been performed as above described, the bird is placed in a warm house, where there are no perches, as, if such appliances were present, the new-made capon might very probably injure himself in his attempts to perch, and perhaps even tear open the satures, and possibly occasion the operation, usually simple and free from danger, to terminate fatally. For about a week, the food of the bird should be soft out meal porridge, and that in small quantities, alternated with bread steeped in milk; he may be given as much pure water as he will drink; but I recommend that it be tepid, or at least that the chill be taken off it. At the end of a week, or, at the furthest, ten days, the bird, if he has been previously of a sound, vigorous constitution, will be all right, and may be turned out into the walk common to all your fowl. The Malays are particularly adapted for caponising, and, when properly fattened, at a suitable time after the operation, attain a bulk and weight that would surprise such persons as have never seen a caponized specimen of that breed; the birds, in fact, rivaling the finest

"Information has been received by Col. Harding, Adjutant General of the State forces, from Gen. Henderson, in a disratch dated at Mexico, Audrain county, January 8th, that Captain Mc-Elroy, with Capt Johnson, Lieut Hardin and one hundred and nineteen men of Col. Fagg's Fifth Missouri State Militia, at one o'clock on that day surprised a rebel camp of two handred and ten on Elk Fork, five miles southwest of Paris, routing them and taking ten prisoners and thirteen horses. The rebel loss was five or six killed—wounded unknown. The Federal loss was two wounded. The rebels were commanded by Thompson and Painter."

THE WESTERN GUNBOAT FLEET. The Projected Attack upon Columbus-The

Chances. [Cairo correspondence of St. Louis Republican.] The gunboats are nearly completed, the last finishing touches being all now necessary. The Beaton, which will be the flag ship, has had its boiler placed lower in the hull, and floats upon the water the most formidable river craft obably ever made. From trial the jar caused by firing on the different boats is se slight as to be hardly perceptible, while the craft can be moved in position easier than was anticipated. They will soon thunder their broadsides before Columbus, and on their effect will hang the fate of the rebel stronghold.

While the Federal gunners, under cover of the iron sides, will be working more safely than in casemates, their opponents, within open earthworks will be fully exposed to the falling storm of shot and shell. The advantage possessed by the assailants in such a case was fully shown at Port Royal, and with the immense mortars and splendid guns of the present fleet in full play, Columbus cannot be held. The country for a mile surrounding there can in less than a day be made wholly untenable, a perfect rain of shell falling among its defenders, while not one shot in two hundred fired at the boats will prove effective, unless setting at naught all calculations of

Although underestimating the struggle neessary to take Columbus would be worse than folly, the opposite view can be rendered still more injurious by embracing the extreme and placing before Union soldiers the ghosts of impossible and barely imaginable terrors. Every clump of bushes around Columbus is not a masked battery, and their flying artillery are not 128-pounders, like the "Lady Polk" of Belmont fame, which burst, it will be remembered, some time since, killing so many, and nearly breaking the leg of Sir Bishop, after whose lady it was named.

To show the difficulty of hitting vessels on the river, the case of the Lexington and Con-estoga, which occurred when I first came to Cairo, some months since, will demonstrate. These beats were engaged for over three hours with several batteries, in all twenty guns, just above Columbus, and although the cannonading was kept up vigorously by the Cenfederates, not a single shot took effect. A gunboat, when in action, lies with the bow up stream, barley meal, with potatoes, &c., a change being | in which position it is motionless, and does not sway with the current's action; only the stern's breadth affords an object for its opponent's aim, and at a mile and a half, or even less.

At peaceful practice it would be hard to hit a similar target, and in the heat of battle it is much more difficult. So, with all the bragging and taunts of another Manassas, the most prudent military men stoutly affirm that Columbus can and will be taken. The Confederate great care. Pick the wings to the ends, and do not cut them off. After picking, remove the intestines, and wipe out the inside with a before last states that six hundred torpedoes before last states that six hundred torpedoes are sunk in the river between Columbus and The body should not be washed, but any bleed Memphis. This last story serves to show how on the surface may be wiped off with a wet credulous a commander would be who should place any reliance upon the men who constantly arrive, proclaiming themselves from the secession army, and telling marvelous tales of hair-breadth escapes.

PAMLICO SOUND. The Norfolk Day Book, of the 9th, says: Information reached the city last evening to the effect that a Federal fleet had made its appearance in Pamilico Sound. The fleet consist of twenty gunboats, drawing from five to six feet of water, and carrying, some of them, five guns. They were first discovered by Capt Hunter, who, while reconnoitering, was shot at by them. On his return to the island he reported the fact, and our force proceeded at once to place themselves in a state of readiness for an attack. This is supposed to be a portion of the Burn-side expedition, and it is thought by some that its object is to prepare for an attack upon Norfolk from the rear. However this may be, one thing is certain, and that is, that should this be their programme, they will find it a hard read to travel before they get to the end of it. We trust that our friends at Roanoke Island will make every preparation to successfully resist the foe, and that when he shows battle they will keep themselves cool and their powder dry, and by their valor cause another "masterly retreat" upon the part of Affairs at Remney.

The Romney (Western Virginia) correspondent of the Wheeling Intelligencer writes Jan 8th: Night before last we were informed that we would move on Blue's Gap during the night. At about midnight the regiments began to muster and form, and by half past twelve the column was in motion. About half past seven o'clock we arrived at a height from which we could see the Gap and the bridge. Col. Dunning, who com-manded the expedition, seeing an attempt being made to burn the bridge, ordered the 5th Ohio regiment to advance at double quick. This was mountain, to which the rebels had fied. There a sharp engagement ensued, whole volleys of musketry were heard, and it was soon discovered that the rebels were firing from behind a breastwork on the top of the mountain. As soon as Col. Dunning discovered this he ordered his men to fix bayonets and charge. While this was being done, the rebels left in haste for their camp at the foot of the mountain and back of the Gap.

While the above action was going on, Col. Mason charged up the mountain to the right with the 4th Ohio, and drove the rebels from the rocks on that side. Some sharp firing occurred in that direction. In the meantime, but when the firing had nearly ceased on the mountains, the 8th Ohio had nearly ceased on the mountains, the 8th Ohio led the way down the Gap, followed by the lat Virginia, 7th Ohio, and the 4th Indiana. Col. Durning having passed on and taken the two pieces of artillery with their caissons and horses, also a wagon and horses, with the 5th Ohio regiment, returned and ordered the cavalry to charge. His orders were obeyed with promptness, but the rebels had taken to the mountains. The artillery could not be used, and not a shot was fired from cannon on either side during the action. The rebels were surprised and it was a complete rout. We found eight dead bodies on the field, or rather amongst the rocks; there may have been more, but they were not reported; and singular as it may appear, not a man of ours received even a scratch from a bullet.

Our force consisted of detachments of the 4th, 5th, 7th and 8th Ohio; the 14th Indiana and the 1st Virginia, together with two companies of cavialry and Daum's battery, with a section of Howard's battery; in all, about 2 500 men. Our information led us to expect about 2 000 rebels, but the citizens and negroes agreed in stating their force at 300. cannon on either side during the action. The Sergt. Bingham, of the Twelfth Indians, was killed near the mouth of the Antietam last week by the accidental bursting of a loaded shell. He had three days' rations left. Up to the time this dispatch is yesterday he, with his full force, appeared at Bath. where there were but about 500 Union troops, being detachments of several regiments. The rebels made an attack with their whole militia force, and were twice repulsed by our volunteers. Subsequently Jackson's regulars made an attack in front, at the same time executing a flank movement, when our small force fell back on Hancock.
